AS WE SEE IT.

From our office-chair, the view of the new store shows a large part of it devoted to the filling of out-oftown wants. Often as we look out upon the busy scene, we wonder if people realize that mail-order shopping has become an institution of general public good, quite as important, in its way, as the post-office, free education, and other advantages of this nineteenth century. Try, for a moment, to look at it as we do.

People everywhere are working from morning until night, from childhood to old age, and it is largely a strug-gle for food and clothing. Every one needs these in order to exist, and it is that necessity which keeps the world ever at work. How important, then, to humanity at large that these great needful things should be supplied on the best terms possible, - that goods should go as nearly as possible direct from the mills and factories to them. If a number of profits are to be added to the cost of an article or articles, then it is impossible for hardearned dollars to buy in the new as much as they ought General, Schofield, commander of the to buy.

It is just here that the great stores of to-day step in. They are based expressed great interest in the proposlargely on this modern idea of buying in bulk from first hands, and turning over the goods to the consumer at a small profit. Such stores require large capital and trade to succeed, and naturally are found only in large cities. But for Mailorder shopping, out-of-town residents ed. Few large stores have a Mailorder service, although with us that has grown to be a leading feature of our business,-due, perhaps, to the fact that people have learned to know that they can write to us for what they want, and be as well General Schofield expects to visit the served as if they came in person. Grand Canyon in May next, when an Mail-order shopping puts before the residents of small towns the chance to get the same goods and prices as city trade. To our mind, the value to them of that privilege cannot be overestimated.
